Shock factor gone... but haunting tale is worth revisiting

GHOST FROM A PERFECT PLACE Arcola Theatre ★★★★☆

The shock factor of Philip Ridley's modern Gothic horror has somewhat diminished.

Sharp-suited gangster Travis Flood (Michael Feast) returns home after a long exile; while his contemporaries did time, Travis swapped Bethnal Green for Hollywood, reminiscing about the "heydays" in a whitewashed autobiography.

Torchie (Sheila Reid) shares that fondness for the past, her "perfect place" - more vivid than the bleak present, which contains her burned-out shell of a flat, hospitalised husband and motherless granddaughter. Said granddaughter, Rio (compelling Florence Hall), is the leader of an adolescent girl gang, made in her image: trumpy Spice Girl-meets-avenging angel.

The action is as heavily signposted as a Dickens novel, with too- neat contrivances leading to inevitable revelations, reunions and moralistic justice. The pleasure, then, is in the winding journey, and Russell Bolam's atmospheric production nicely interrogates the motivations behind recollection, lending the scenes a crackling energy.

Feast and Reid form a sterling tragicomic double act as they summon ghosts to re-enact Torchie's agonising losses: she desperately seeking a way to avert disaster, he experiencing crippling visceral empathy.

Rio and her gang (spiky Scarlett Brookes and Rachel Redford) seek new world order by asserting violent power over men, but remain defined by their original abusers - such vengeance is a hollow gesture.

Ridley may be treading familiar ground with his observation that old sins cast long shadows, but this haunting piece of the past is worth revisiting.
